'I should like to write a very subtle work on the proper writing of lives. What it is that you can write - and what writing is. It comes over me that I know nothing of the art', Virginia Stephen confided in her brother-in-law, Clive Bell, in 1908 (Letters i, 325). Many years later she would fulfil her ambition, writing subtle essays on 'The New Biography' (1927) and 'The Art of ...
